

THOMAS KENNY, JR.

THOMAS KENNY, JR., eldest son of ex-revenue collector Thomas Kenny, of West New Brighton, was born at West New Brighton in 1866. He was educated in the Christian Brothers' School, of New York city, and the De La Salle Institute. After graduating from the Institute he completed a course in Walworth's Stenographic College, New York, where he had one of the most thorough masters and teachers in the profession. Immediately after receiving his diploma he was appointed by the Hon. Stephen D. Stephens as the official stenographer of the surrogate's court and county court and court of sessions, which position he still holds. He has the honor of being the youngest court stenographer in the state, and young as he is, he is rated as one of the leading, most careful and correct men in his profession.

Mr. Kenny is also president of the Young Men's Catholic Union, of West New Brighton, a position he has held with entire satisfaction to the members of the Union for the past seven years.

He is still unmarried and lives with his parents at West New Brighton, the place of his birth.
